SECTION 4.

READING

Task 1. Read the passage and then answer the questions below.

/6x1=6 points/

Naturally Better Homes

In the 1970s, many people became concerned about energy. People had to face up to the fact that they used too much energy, and energy sources were not going to last forever. One architect, Michael Reynolds, decided to do something. He set out to design homes that were cheaper to build and more energy efficient. In addition, he wanted to do something about all the garbage. Finally, he came up with the idea of “earthships.”

Although it sounds like a boat, an earthship is a house. However, unlike regular houses, earthships are constructed from garbage and are built using only ten percent of the energy needed to build a typical house. Moreover, after they are built, earthships use only ten percent of the energy required to heat, light, and cool a regular home. Although earthships sound unique, they can actually be built to look just like any other house.

One of the big benefits of earthships is that they are made from recycled materials. The main construction material of an earthship is used tires that are filled with dirt. The dirt-filled tires are then laid flat and stacked like bricks. Because the tires are round, there is lots of extra space between the columns of tires. These spaces are filled with used cardboard. The tires and cardboard form the outside walls of an earthship. The inside walls between rooms in the earthship do not need to be as strong as the outside walls; therefore, the inside walls are made with old cans, bottles, and cement that are eventually covered and painted to look just like walls in a typical home.

Another benefit of an earthship is that it saves energy and natural resources. For example, an earthship uses less water. Rain water, which is collected on the roof, is used for drinking and bathing. Furthermore, earthships need much less energy for heating and cooling because they are built into the ground, which keeps the temperature inside the house from getting too hot or too cold. In the long run, this helps earthship owners lower their utility bills. As well, one wall of an earthship usually faces south. Therefore, solar heat helps to warm the house, and solar panels built on the roof generate electricity to run appliances in the house.

All of these features make earthships very environmentally friendly. That’s one of the reasons they have become popular throughout the world. Earthships have been built in Bolivia, Australia, Mexico, Japan, Canada, England, Scotland, and all over the US. Maybe in the near future, an earthship will be landing near you!

39. What is the main idea of this reading?

- A. Earthships are in many different countries.
- B. Environmentalists are concerned about energy.
- C. Earthships are environmentally friendly homes.
- D. Earthships look like typical houses.
- E. Earthships save energy.

40. What is the main building material of earthships?
A. cement
B. old cans and bottles
C. used cardboard
D. used tires
E. concrete
41. Why do earthships need less energy to heat and cool them?
A. They are more energy efficient.
B. They are built into the ground.
C. They recycle water.
D. They are typically very small.
E. They were made of tires.
42. In an earthship, old boxes would be used to _____.
A. fill outside walls
B. recycle water
C. create fertilizer
D. build inside walls
E. pay utility bills
43. One benefit of the earthship is _____.
A. generating electricity
B. keeping the temperature
C. solar panels
D. a facing south wall
E. a low electricity payment
44. The phrase “environmentally friendly” in paragraph 5 is closest in meaning to
A. bad for the environment
B. good for the environment
C. made from natural products
D. found throughout the environment
E. to make environment clean

Task 2. Read the summary of the passage and fill in the blanks with the following words or phrase. There are two extra words or phrase.

/3x3=9 points/

A. generate B. stacking C. faced up to D. concerned E. require

A man who was 45. _____ about the environment came up with the idea of earthships. An earthship is a special kind of house that is environmentally friendly. On the outside, an earthship looks like a typical house. However, the outside walls are made of 46. _____ old tires and putting cardboard between the tires. Other nice features of an earthship include solar panels that 47. _____ electricity and tanks that collect rain water on the roof. Earthships not only help us recycle waste, but they help save natural resources in the long run.
